Dylan Mahalingan, 13, and a Hood student, is among a group of New England youth being recognized and honored by "Build-A-Bear Workshop" for helping make the world a better place. The students are semi-finalists in the 2009 search for Build-a-Bear's Huggable Heroes winner.

Mahalingan founded an organization called Lil' MDGs, using the poer of digital media and the Internet to empower children to meet the Millenium Development Goals, or MDGs, while working on social issues locally and around the world and making a change.

Using the power of technology, Mahalingan works to network children from around the globe in unified efforts to make a difference. So far, he has mobilized children from 31 states and 24 countries to report $780,000 for tsunami relief and millions to support hurricane relief.

"The Huggable Heroes program is our way of empowering young people to take action and make positive changes in their communities and around the world," Build-A-Bear founder and chief executive Maxine Clark said. "This year's group of semi-finalists is a representation of the kind and compassionate young leaders out there making a difference and we hope others find inspiration from their stories to go out and do something good."

Ultimately, 12 youth will be named 2009 Huggable Heroes and will be honored this summer in Missouri at the Build-A-Bear Workshop "bearquarters." Each winner will take home a $10,000, with a portion in the form of an educational scholarship and the remainder to be donated to a charity of the hero's choice.

The Huggable Heroes program began in 2004 with young people being nominated for their volunteer and community service efforts.

The list will be narrowed down to 50 finalists in April, then in May the winning dozen will be named.

Mahalingam is also very active in the Derry school district, working on bringing a "go green" effort to the district.
